THE LIABILITY OF EU MEMBER STATES FOR BREACHES OF EU LAW COMMITTED BY NATIONAL COURTS: THE RECEPTION OF THE PRINCIPLE BY THE GREEK SUPREME COURTS

Abstract

One of the most interesting examples of jurisprudential development and harmonisation of national law rules is that of the recognition and structuring of the liability of EU Member States for breaches of EU law, with the identification of the principle in the Francovich decision and its deepening with the Köbler decision which set the conditions for liability for acts of the judicial bodies of the Member States. The Köbler judgment was the subject of extensive commentary by lawyers from almost all Member States, Greece included. In effect, the fact that the Greek constitutional order does not provide for liability for acts of the State's judicial bodies, the Greek supreme courts faced this principle with hesitation and went through different stages of case law until settling on a specific position. The lecture will focus on this "journey" of the Greek supreme courts' case law until its recent status.
